EU Regulation 261/2004

EU Regulation 261/2004 is the key piece of legislation that governs air passenger rights in the event of flight delays. According to this regulation, passengers are entitled to compensation if their flight is delayed for more than three hours, unless the delay is due to extraordinary circumstances such as bad weather or air .traffic control strikes

Compensation Amounts

The amount of compensation you may be entitled to depends on the length of your flight and the length of the delay. For example, if you are flying within the EU and your flight is delayed by more than three hours, you could be entitled to 250 euros for a flight of 1,500 kilometers or less, and 400 euros for a flight of over 1,500 kilometers. For longer flights to non-EU destinations, the amounts are 400 euros for a flight of 1,500-3,500 kilometers, and 600 euros for a flight of over 3,500 .kilometers

Case Study

Condor Flugdienst GmbH*, the European Court of Justice ruled that passengers who experience a delay of three hours or more, caused by the airline, are entitled to compensation. This landmark case set a precedent for similar situations and reinforced passengers' rights in the EU.

What to Do in Case of a Delayed Flight

If you find yourself in a situation where your flight is delayed, it's important to know your rights. Firstly, you should ask the airline for information about the delay and the reason behind it. You also request food, drinks, and if the delay is long. Additionally, it's important to keep all relevant documentation, such as boarding passes and receipts, in case you need to make a claim for compensation later on.
